I understand the quotation "Talent is cheaper than table salt. What separates the talented individual from the successful one is a lot of hard work" this way: talented people don't ~~require~~ have to put in a lot of effort to do a task that would require quite a bit of hard work to complete for a non-talented individual.

I agree with this statement because the lack of effort put in said task means the person didn't really have to work to achieve something, while a non-talented person put a lot of effort into learning and working.

Talent didn't require a person to spend a lot and a lot of time studying and practicing so therefore they technically didn't really have already had the needed amount of hard work.

A lot of people spend a lot of time achieving something it takes a lot of effort. Some talented people put ~~less~~ effort and as shown in Picasso shows many such cases - so many to stop count. Talented people have it much easier. Effort of a non-talented person is much much more valuable than that of a talented person.

I completely agree with this statement. Hard work is worth much more than raw talent.
